

About Dementia Canterbury

In the early 1980s there was little public awareness about dementia in New Zealand and virtually no support services were available to people with dementia and their carers. This prompted a small group of Christchurch social workers to form the first ever support group in New Zealand dedicated to helping people care for those with dementia.

Support groups for carers remain an integral part of Dementia Canterbury and as the organisation has grown and developed, it has incorporated the important roles of education, volunteering, advocacy and support for all people affected by dementia. Dementia Canterbury includes Ashburton, North Canterbury to Kaikoura and the West Coast regions.

What is dementia?

Dementia is a collection of symptoms that cause a progressive decline in a person's ability to think, to remember and to reason.

What are the symptoms of dementia?

Every person with dementia is affected differently.

Common symptoms may include:

- Gradual memory loss
- Repeating statements or questions
- Difficulty performing familiar tasks
- Difficulty handling money
- Loss of initiative
- Impaired judgement
- Disorientation of time and place
- Personality changes
- Changes in mood or behaviour
- Problems with language
- Deterioration in driving skills
- Misplacing things

Dementia is not a normal part of the aging process. A person with dementia may not experience all of these symptoms.

What are the most common types of dementia?

Alzheimer's disease is the most common type of dementia. Others include: Vascular, Lewy body, Frontotemporal, alcohol related dementia, younger onset, and Parkinsonian related dementia.
